WorkLink is an employment resource that assists businesses to hire and support employees with disabilities. We work with employers to fill existing job openings—or can also help businesses to create customized positions to address small needs or support key staff. WorkLink has access to a wide range of job seekers—from entry level candidates to seasoned professionals. All candidates go through an in-depth evaluation process. Once hired, an on-site employment specialist is available to help situate the new employee. They develop training strategies and work closely with your staff to learn to effectively supervise and direct the new employee. It is a team-based approach to employment.

WorkLink, TransCen, Inc.'s San Francisco-based employment service, provides three levels of direct support for job seekers with disabilities:

Integrated Work (a braided service that combines supported employment and community-based day services for individuals with more complex support needs),

Supported Employment (individuals whose main service need is employment support), and Competitive Placement (for individuals seeking professional positions).

The program's goal is twofold- to "operationalize" best practice and to assist individuals to find great jobs. Through WorkLink, TransCen seeks to implement state-of-the-art services and develop effective tools and strategies that we then share with the field. WorkLink staff work with state agencies, school districts and service providers throughout the nation (and abroad) to improve employment outcomes for individuals with more complex support needs. Because of our real world experience and commitment to best practice, WorkLink's trainings provide innovative, practical methods that benefit direct service professionals. ### Consultation

WorkLink assesses your company's organizational needs. A WorkLink employment consultant meets with you to pinpoint staffing needs and potential job duties. WorkLink then recruits an applicant who matches your requirements. We draw from a pool of job seekers who are interested in both full and part time positions.

Recruitment

We work with businesses to recruit and train employees to fill a variety of professional, semi-skilled and entry level positions. We can provide prescreened, highly motivated, dependable applicants to fill your staffing needs.

On-Site Assistance

WorkLink's employment consultant works with you and your staff to develop training and support strategies to ensure your new employee is able to do his or her job successfully.

On-site assistance may include situating the employee, developing skills, organizing tasks and locating accommodations or adaptive devices.

The length of our on-site training and support is determined by the needs of your business and the new employee.

Volunteer/Internship Programs

We aim to provide qualified and skilled applicants. As part of the assessment and evaluation process, we may develop an internship or volunteer opportunity in order to develop skills or explore a potential career path.
